The domain of this project is that of e-health, with a special focus on providing innovative services through web-based services and mobile technologies. The strategic objective of the project is to design and develop a solution in the cloud which is capable of delivering services related to the health-care domain by following the platform as a service (PaaS) paradigm.

Period: 2013-2015

My contributions included the design of the software architecture of the platform aimed at fulfilling the main goals of the project, and consulting activities to support the development of the software platform itself.

Developed tools

FLYAQ

FLYAQ proposes an open-source platform to support missions planning of autonomous quadrotors. FLYAQ will allow users to define missions at a high level of abstraction and the will automatically synthesize the code for each quadrotor that will be involved in the mission. In this way FLYAQ will allow an easy and error-prone definition of the missions, thus effectively supporting human personnel during missions.

A4WSN

A4WSN is a novel modelling and analysis platform to support an architecture-driven development of WSNs. The platform leverages a multi-view architectural approach based on three modeling languages to describe a WSN from different viewpoints. The modeling framework is supported by a programming framework that enables the implementation of analysis and code generation plugins by third party developers.

<http://a4wsn.di.univaq.it>

MEGAF

MEGAF is an infrastructure for realizing architecture frameworks with a focus on reusing already defined viewpoints and languages and considering stakeholders and their concerns as part of the framework itself.

<http://megaf.di.univaq.it>

byADL

byADL is a framework for developing next generation ADLs according to their evolved requirements. Emerging requirements include: support for domain specific concerns, support for multiple views, extensibility, analysis features, interoperability with other ADLs, promote architecture-centric development and tool-support. byADL is implemented in Eclipse and it is built on model-driven technologies.

<http://byadl.di.univaq.it>

DUALLY

DUALLY is an Eclipse based framework to create interoperability among UML2 and Architectural Description Languages (ADLs). DUALLY works at two abstraction levels: meta-modeling (via AMW weaving models), and modeling (via UML, Ecore models and ATL transformations)
